GETTYSBURG.

HEADQUARTERS OF GENERAL GEORGE G. MEADE.

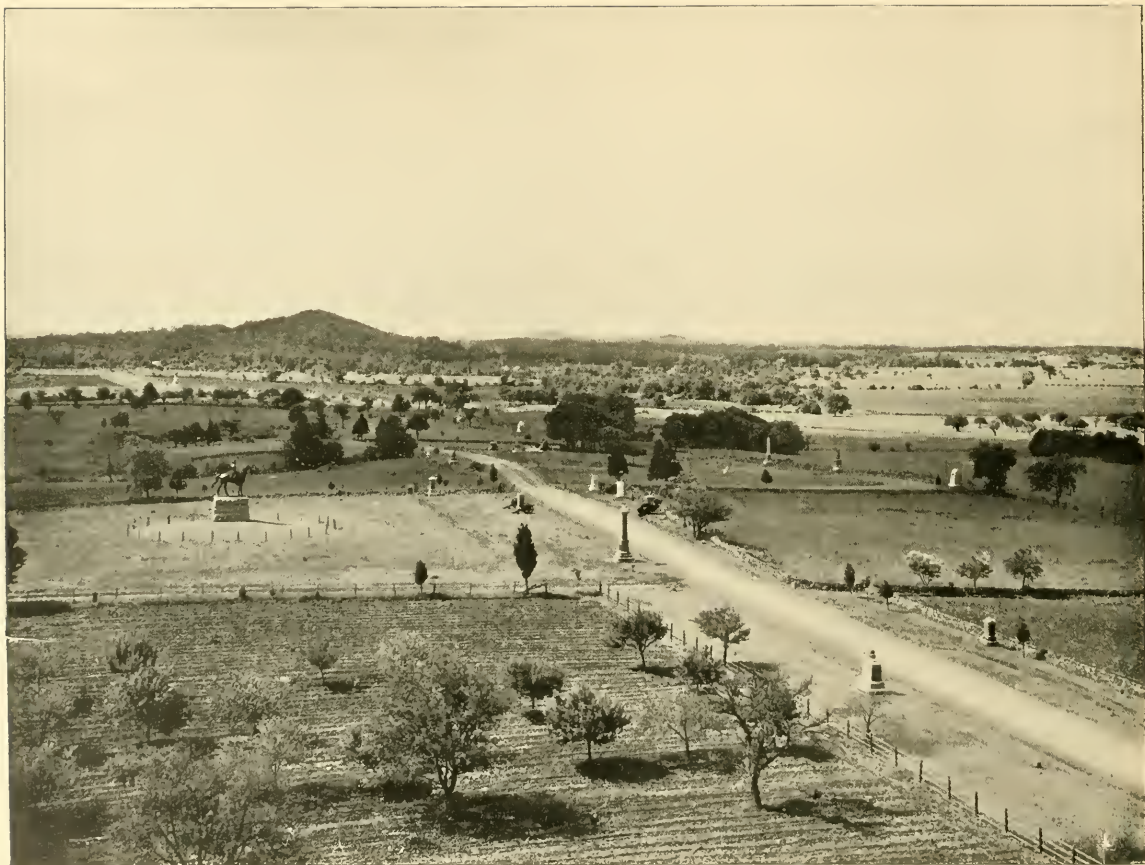

HEADQUARTERS OF GENERAL ROBERT E. LEE.

THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

It was from the cupola of this building that General Buford directed the opening of the battle, July 1, 1863.

LITTLE ROUND TOP.

BLOODY ANGLE.

PANORAMA OF THE BATTLEFIELD.

CALEF'S BATTERY.

It was here the battle opened. McPherson's Wood is seen in the background. The position between the wood and the battery was occupied by Stone's Brigade.

MCPHERSON'S WOOD.

Scene of the surrender of General Archer's Confederate Brigade to the "Iron Brigade," commanded by General Meredith.

REYNOLDS GROVE.

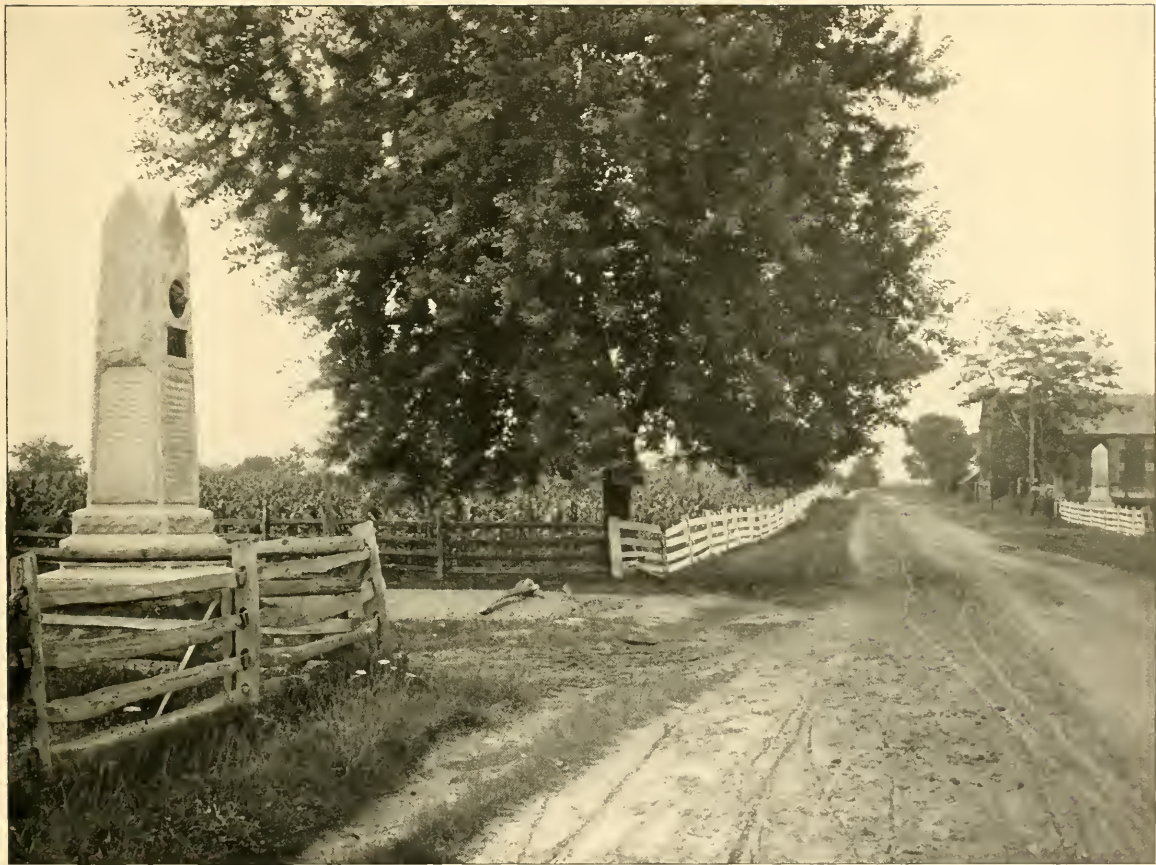

The place in McPherson's Wood where General Reynolds was killed on the morning of the first day.

CEMETERY HILL.

It was to this hill the Union forces fell back at the close of the first day's fight.

GENERAL AMES ARTILLERY MONUMENT.

THE PEACH ORCHARD.

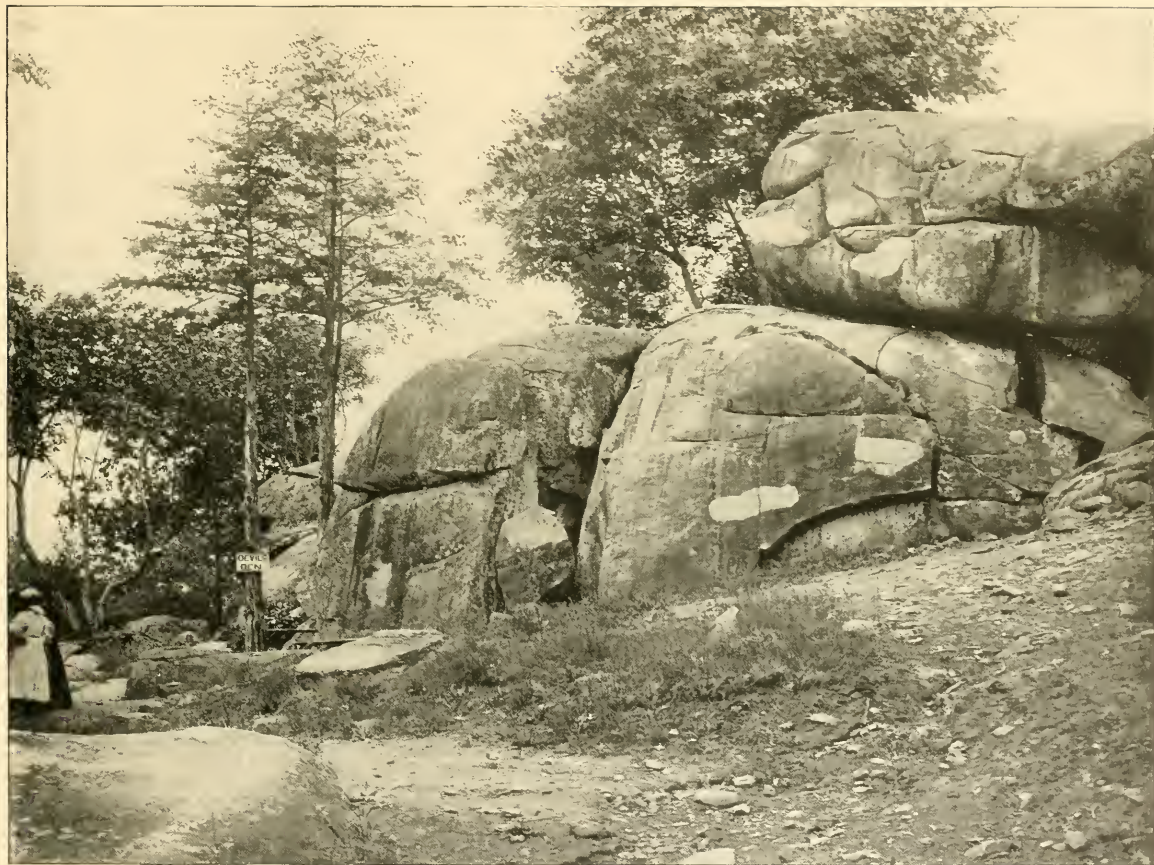

Position of General Birney's Division. This point was gained and held by the Confederates on the afternoon of the second day.

THE WHEAT FIELD.

Colonel Cross' Brigade formed here, but was relieved by Colonel Brooke's Brigade, which charged across the field and up the rocky hill in the background of the picture. General Semmes' Georgia Brigade attacked the Union troops here afterwards and forced them back on the afternoon of the second day.

THE DEVIL'S DEN.

It was here that Robertson's Confederate Brigade engaged that of Ward on the afternoon of the second day.

LITTLE ROUND TOP, FROM THE DEVIL'S DEN.

Here some of the heaviest fighting of the second day took place, with the advantage first on one side, and then on the other.

MONUMENT OF THE 91ST PENNA.

THE SUMMIT OF LITTLE ROUND TOP.

POSITION OF HAZLETT'S BATTERY.

This position was occupied on the second day by Lieutenant Hazlett's Union Battery. It was on this spot that General Weed was shot, and while receiving his last words Hazlett was also killed.

VIEW FROM THE SUMMIT OF LITTLE ROUND TOP.

To the left are the Wheat Field and the Peach Orchard, immediately in front is the Devil's Den, and to the right is Cemetery Ridge and the battlefield of the second and third days.

THE EAST SLOPE OF CULP'S HILL.

The Confederates secured this position on the evening of the second day, and held it until they were driven out on the forenoon of the third, by the Brigades of Generals Geary and Wadsworth.

THE SUMMIT OF CULP'S HILL.

STEVENS' BATTERY, BETWEEN EAST CEMETERY AND CULP'S HILL.
This battery raked the Confederate line when charging East Cemetery Hill on the second day.

RICKETTS' BATTERY. EAST CEMETERY HILL.

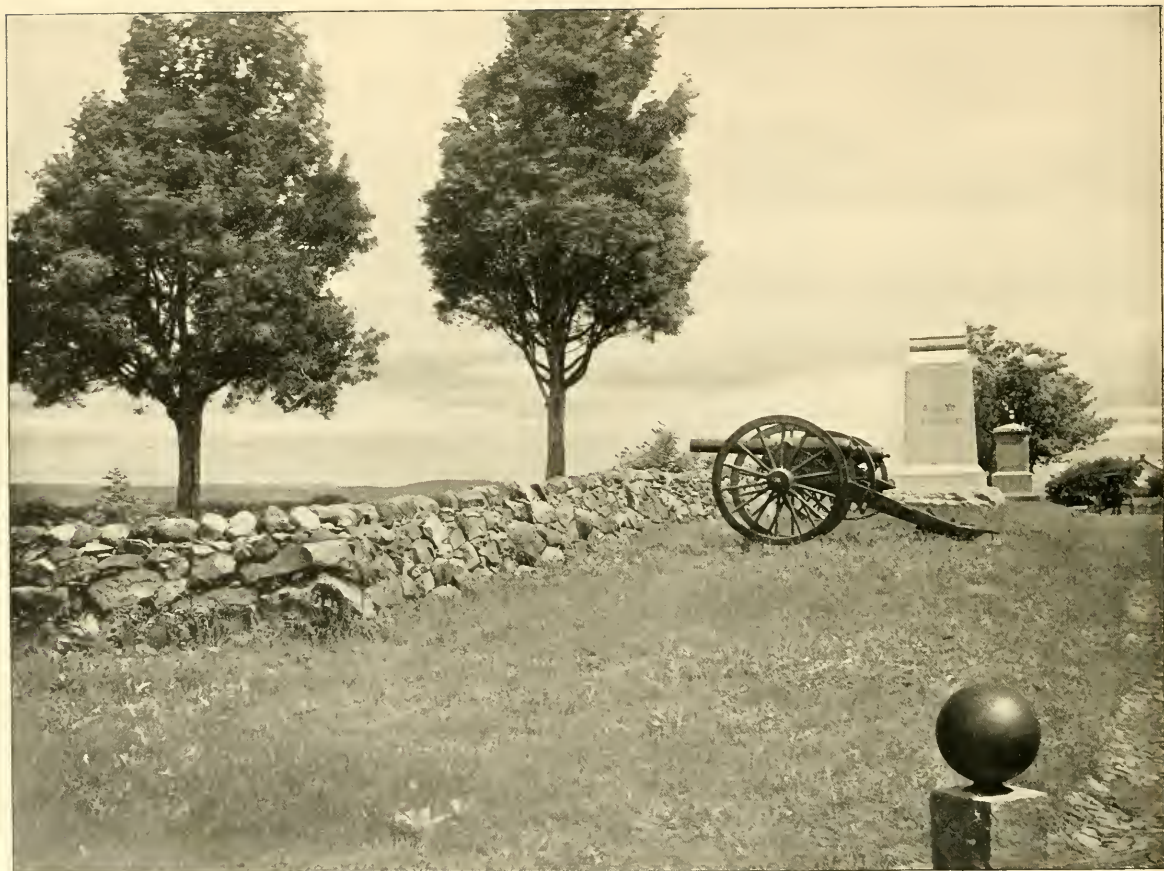

This Battery was charged and captured by the "Louisiana Tigers," but was eventually recaptured by Carroll's Brigade. Here a most desperate hand to hand conflict took place. Out of seventeen hundred "Tigers" who made the charge, less than three hundred returned. This assault and repulse ended the fight of the second day.

THE GROVE OF TREES.

Occupied on the third day's fight by Wells' Brigade, and used by Longstreet as a landmark in making his famous assault.

THE BLOODY ANGLE. SCENE OF PICKETT'S CHARGE.

"Round Gettysburg, at noon of day,
Stand armies of the Blue and Gray
In battle line's superb array,
While cannon shake the ground ;

" Like tempest waves against the rock
The Gray rush onward to the shock ;
In deadly clasp the foeman lock,
At Bloody Angle's fray ;
The Blue, like the granite rock

" The soldiers brave that won the day,
Whom earthly foe did ne'er dismay,
Who hurled to death the lines of Gray,
Nor quailed beneath their guns,
Whose glory will survive for aye.

HIGH-WATER MARK.

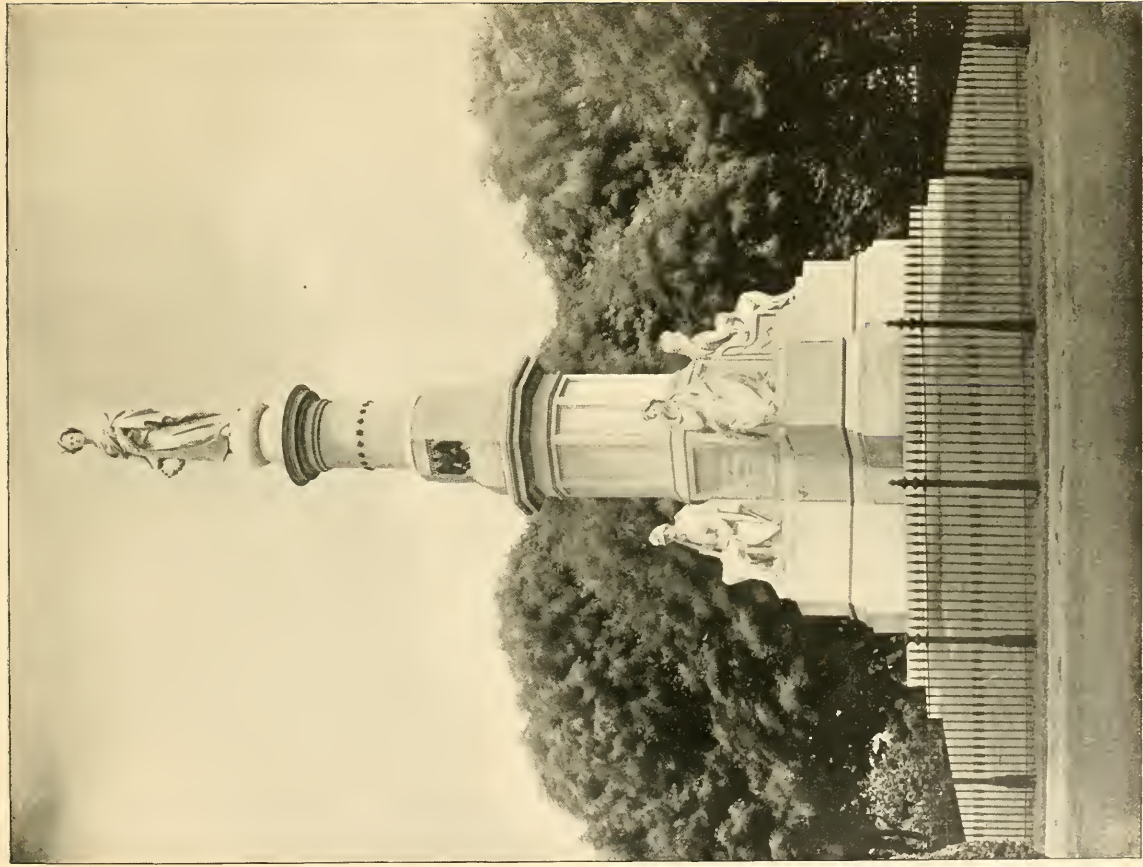

Bachelder says: "It was here that one of the most gallant charges recorded in history terminated; here that the tide of success of the Confederacy turned; from this spot the defeated troops fell back, and never again made a successful stand. This was, indeed, the high-water mark of the Rebellion."
